Former Red Sox 1st baseman Buckner dies after battle with dementia

A well-respected hitter, Buckner will forever be known, though, for his 1986 World Series Game 6 error.

Bill Buckner, the 1980 National League batting champion who registered more than 2,700 hits during a career that touched four decades, died Monday after a battle with dementia. He was 69.

Buckner debuted with the Los Angeles Dodgers at age 19 in 1969, became an All-Star, won a batting title with the Chicago Cubs, and committed the infamous error at first base for the Boston Red Sox during the 1986 World Series.

"After battling the disease of Lewy Body Dementia, Bill Buckner passed away early the morning of May 27th surrounded by his family," his family said in a statement. "Bill fought with courage and grit as he did all things in life. Our hearts are broken but we are at peace knowing he is in the arms of his Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Buckner batted better than .300 in seven seasons, including a National League-leading .324 clip in 1980. The left-handed batter also led the NL in doubles in his All-Star season of 1981 (35) and 1983 (38) and retired after the 1990 season with a .289 lifetime average and 2,715 hits, 174 homers, 498 doubles, 1,077 runs and 1,208 RBIs in 2,517 games.

Despite those numbers, Buckner was forever linked to his defensive gaffe in Game 6 of the 1986 World Series against the New York Mets.

Seeking their first title since 1918, the Red Sox were up 3-2 in the series and leading 5-3 in the bottom of the 10th inning. After the Mets scored two runs to tie it, a ground ball by Mookie Wilson passed through Buckner's legs and allowed Ray Knight to score the winning run. New York went on to win Game 7, and the error became the defining moment of Buckner's career.

"We had developed a friendship that lasted well over 30 years," Wilson said, via the Mets. "I felt badly for some of the things he went through. Bill was a great, great baseball player whose legacy should not be defined by one play."

Buckner returned to Boston's Fenway Park for the 2008 home opener, after the Red Sox had won their second World Series in four years. He received a two-minute standing ovation before throwing out the ceremonial first pitch.

"I thought [that] was kind of a healing moment, it seemed, for a lot of people and maybe for him, I hope," Cleveland Indians manager Terry Francona, the Red Sox skipper in 2008, said on MLB.com. "You have to be up here to understand how people take things that happen. I thought that was a really cool moment."

Former Dodgers teammate and longtime major league manager Bobby Valentine expressed his grief on social media. "As I clear my head and hold back the tears, I know I will always remember Billy Buck as a great hitter and a better friend. He deserved better," Valentine tweeted.

Buckner, who retired to Boise, Idaho, is survived by his wife, Jody, and three children, Brittany, Christen and Bobby. REUTERS

Divided pro-EU leaders open talks after election

2 Parties committed to closer European Union integration began bargaining over jobs and policy on Monday after an election to the E.U. parliament which fragmented the center but gave only limited gains to nationalists. National leaders of the bloc, many of whom hailed the vote as a vindication, will meet to chart the next steps on Tuesday. Matteo Salvini, Italian deputy prime minister, leader of the anti-immigration League and potential builder of a far-right alliance across Europe, said his 34 percent of the Italian national vote was a mandate to rip up euro zone budget austerity rules. But despite other wins for eurosceptics in big countries, including France, Poland and would-be ex-member Britain, the result was taken as a vote of confidence by mainstream leaders after turnout surged and nationalists advanced only modestly. At least 9 miners die after Zimbabwe mine collapse

3 At least nine illegal gold miners have died in Zimbabwe after they detonated explosives underground and were trapped at a mine owned by unlisted London-headquartered Metallon Corporation north of the capital Harare, the company said on Monday. Metallon put its Mazowe Mine on care and maintenance last September, citing viability problems. One of Zimbabwe's biggest gold producers, it still operates three other mines. Metallon said in a statement the mine collapse happened on Sunday when illegal miners gained access to underground shafts and blasted explosives. "Tragically nine panners lost their lives. None of these miners were employees of Metallon and all those involved with keeping the mine on care and maintenance have been accounted for," Metallon said. REUTERS

Trump backs North Korea's scathing Biden criticism

4 President Donald Trump on Monday publicly endorsed North Korea's scathing personal attack on former U.S. Vice President Joe Biden, dismissing criticism that he was siding with a foreign dictator over a fellow American. "Well, Kim Jong-un made a statement that Joe Biden is a low-IQ individual. He probably is, based on his record. I think I agree with him on that," Trump told a news conference in Tokyo. Trump's comments on the world stage reinforced a tweet that he sent on Saturday with a similar message and drew renewed criticism of the president back home. North Korea's state-run news agency issued a stinging attack last week on Biden, who has been critical of the isolated state. Trump has targeted Biden with increasing criticism as the former vice president rises in polls for the Democratic presidential nomination in the November 2020 election campaign. REUTERS

American climber dies on descent from summit of Mount Everest

Christopher John Kulish died suddenly after climbing the 29,035-foot peak.

An American climber died on the descent from the summit of Mount Everest on Monday, a Nepalese official said, taking the number of dead or missing mountaineers on the world's highest mountain to nine on the Nepali side during the current climbing season.

Christopher John Kulish, 61, scaled the 29,035-foot peak from the normal Southeast Ridge route in the morning but died suddenly at South Col after descending from the summit, Mira Acharya, a Nepal tourism department official said.

The authorities did not say where he was from in the United States. The cause of his death was unclear.

Most of the deaths on Everest this year have been attributed to exhaustion and tiredness, exacerbated because a crowded route to and from the summit has led to delays. The short climbing season ends this month.

The route, also called the South Col route, was pioneered by New Zealander Sir Edmund Hillary and Nepalese Sherpa Tenzing Norgay in 1953.

About 5,000 people have scaled the Everest summit so far and about 300 have died on its slopes.

Two climbers were also confirmed dead on the Tibetan side of Mount Everest this climbing season.

A record 381 climbers had been permitted to scale the summit from the Nepali side this season. About 130 others were tackling Everest from the mountain's northern side in Tibet. REUTERS

Take a break from the real world

Frenship hit the stage this weekend. GETTY IMAGES

Platinum-selling duo Frenship discuss their new album and tour.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

Summer is almost here and it's time to take a vacation with the platinum-selling duo Frenship (Brett Hite and James Sunderland), who recently released their debut full-length album and are now hitting the road with their "Vacation" tour. The L.A.-based duo took the music world by storm with their 2016 smash-hit single "Capsize," featuring Emily Warren, but if you think that's the epitome of Frenship's talent and success, you're in for a treat. Besides wanting every show to feel as intimate as it is high-energy, both Hite and Sunderland want this album and tour to do more than just entertain. They want to inspire audiences to leave the real world behind and take a break from their problems — or a vacation, if you will. Sunderland and Hite sat down with Metro to discuss their new album, their inspirations and what you can expect from their tour this summer.

"Vacation" is your first full-length album. What went into writing this album and what was the inspiration?
Brett Hite (BH): I don't know if just one thing claimed it for what it was about, but I think there was a general sense of being tired of the situation that we were in, both in, like, living in L.A. and kind of missing the mountains and the trees and then [with] the label. Where we were was really exhausting and really not helping us much, so I think there's a bit of desire or longing, longing to get away, longing for the people that we miss. So yeah, I think that longing went into making this.

Did you feel stifled by the label or did they have a vision that was not quite what you wanted?
James Sunderland (JS): Yeah, I think we were stifled creatively. I think in essence we had a really big song and that opens up the world for you. You know, you have 10 choices of labels, you can do whatever the hell you want. You can make everything, you can pay for this, pay for that. At the start of it, we thought we were getting into a really long relationship that was going to last our entire career, because we're looking to build the 20-year, 30-year career. You don't have to have hit songs one after the other in order to do that. We want to be a little more artistic and go in different directions musically with videos and you name it. [But] I think we ended up butting heads on multiple things. I mean, the label operates off of the wins. They are in a game of quick turnover and quick return, so again we were hoping to last a long time and they just kind of weren't on the same page and that's what came after.
BH: I think at the end of the day, they very much understand that it's a business and we operate that way as well. But we think there are some times where you need to be creative. This happened on multiple occasions, that we had this whole thing and this is what we wanted it to look like, and we wanted to take six months to a year to make it look like this, and then they'll say, "No one will get that" and "That won't make sense to anyone." Then literally six months later we'll be seeing Shawn Mendes and other people doing this exact thing that we wanted to do, and that's just kind of one example of the frustrations there. I mean, at the end of the day the real fact is that we made the label millions, and we couldn't get $500 for a paper ad. That's just not a good relationship to be in.

Jumping back to your new album, "Vacation," do you have a favorite song on there or even a favorite song to perform?
JS: Only speaking for me, I really love "Get Out My Way," and I love playing "Run II U." I don't sing a ton on that one, but it's kind of nice to just sit back and let Brett do what he does, so I would say those two do it for me.

How was collaborating with Bastille and Yoke Lore for the album?
BH: Great. Collaborations are not always an easy thing but they tend to be a lot easier and more natural when the people kind of feel like family to you. And both of them do feel like family to us. It just kind of helps smooth things along. You don't have to spend the first few hours working with them trying to figure out who they are and trying to figure out where they are at in life before you even start going. But it makes a very smooth process.

Are there any other artists that you would like to collaborate with?
JS: Oh yeah, probably too many to name. We're huge fans of Boniver and we're still Coldplay fans. We would love to get in the room with Chris Martin sometime, and those are kind of two of our muses.

What do you like most about taking your music on the road?
BH: For me, it's very specific: looking out and seeing people's faces. You can see the story of what the song means to them. With this tour, I'm curious to see how it goes because it starts the day after the album gets released, so we will see if people are familiar with our new stuff at all. But yeah, I really like seeing everybody wear their own experiences on their faces.

What kind of energy do you try to bring when you play?
JS: A lot of it depends on the room that it's happening in. If it's a huge, sold-out show, there's a lot of energy. But we try not to pay attention to that, [we] bring as much energy as we can every night even if we're tired or whatever. It's a fairly high-energy show. We got some planned choreography. I think a lot of shows we go to, the artist doesn't do a ton of interaction with the crowd; in fact, it's quite the opposite. We try to make it feel like a living room and we try to make it a personal experience.

Overall, what can audience members expect when attending a concert of yours?
JS: I think that they can expect to forget their lives for an hour and a half. I think that is the goal that we try to do [with] every show, to try to keep people trapped in that room, not texting, not on their phones, not trying to think about other things in life. It really is us trying to keep people present. I think people can expect to be present for an hour and a half, which is hard to do.

Frenship is hitting the stage at the Paradise Rock Club in Boston on June 2 at 7 p.m.

'Diego Maradona' follows the superstar reaching godlike status

Diego Maradona, Napoli player, challenges Carlo Ancelotti of AC Milan during an Italian League match in 1990. GETTY IMAGES

After "Amy," the 2015 documentary about the life and death of British singer-songwriter Amy Winehouse, British director Asif Kapadia reveals the path of an Argentine footballer.

PAULO PORTUGAL, MWN

Is there a better combination than passion for football and cinema? Asif Kapadia's "Diego Maradona" portrays the phenomenal rise of probably the biggest football star ever. With some déjà vu elements, this great documentary comes very close to the passion and emotion fans dedicate to some stars of soccer.

Kapadia was as well set to work on a film about Cristiano Ronaldo, but ended up only participating in the production of the documentary about the Portuguese footballer. That was in 2015, when Asif was involved in his Amy Winehouse project. This time, he brought "Diego Maradona" to Cannes, revealing the golden period of the Argentine player between 1984 and 1991. It is a shame that the 58-year-old legend was not present at the screening.

Following his career in Napoli, the movie features the adrenaline of delirious stages, from celebrations to every magic goal achieved thanks to impossible dribbles. But all that is also mixed with complex connections with Italian mafia-type crime syndicate Camorra and a local powerful boss, Luigi Giuliano.

In fact, as soon as Maradona arrives in Italy, he is asked, "Do you know what the Camorra is?" That, of course, happened at a time when doping control was almost nonexistent, as everything was seen within the cocaine euphoria. But everything that rises ends up bringing a hangover and premeditating the end of the dream.

Of course, part of all of this belongs more or less to the story — just like the "Hand of God" goal at the 86th World Cup in Mexico. And that was thanks to Kapadia's access to an impressive volume of archive footage, which basically allowed him make the film. We even hear the voice of Maradona commenting on all the ups and downs. Equally important, we see the reports of his trainer-physician Fernando Signorini, who formed part of the player's success.

"Diego Maradona" is a complete record of the footballer's Italian period that allows us to get to know Fioritto Villa as well, at the time an authentic neighborhood on the outskirts of Buenos Aires. Going through a short flashback just to account for the traumatic formation of Maradona's passage through Barcelona, which ended with scenes of pounding in the field.

It is interesting to travel until 1984, the year of the first Maradona championship in Italy. In that southern Italian city of Naples, Maradona would perform a miracle of recovering a team that was in danger of being eliminated from the division and winning the "Scudetto" twice.

Devers looking like a superstar

2019 proving to be the Sox third baseman's breakout year.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

The Red Sox caught lightning in a bottle with several players last year during their magical run to a world championship. In fact, just about every player in the batting lineup had a career year in 2018, save for Rafael Devers.

After raking to close the 2017 regular season and putting up a strong performance that year in the postseason against Houston as well, big things were projected for Devers in his first full MLB season last year. But injuries, a lack of discipline at the plate, and inconsistent play overall paved the way to a disappointing season for Devers. Sox manager Alex Cora often chose going with veteran Eduardo Nunez in key games last season and during the postseason. In fact, Devers didn't even get a pinch hit opportunity in three of the Red Sox's first five playoff games last October.

This year, however, it is Devers who is having the breakout campaign, while some of his Sox teammates have regressed back to their career mean.

"His brain is really starting to develop," Red Sox assistant hitting coach Andy Barkett told ESPN of Devers. "He's really game planning. He's learning himself. He's learning how to carry himself as an adult in the big leagues. I'm happy and I feel blessed. I feel like Alex and our staff can be a part of this journey for him and help him along, because we all care about him and love the kid very much."

Devers is hitting .330 so far this season with seven homers, 30 RBIs and a .393 OBP. This comes a year after the Dominican star hit just .240 and finished with a grand total of 66 RBIs.

The 22-year-old was dominant on the Sox's most recent road trip as he blasted dingers in three consecutive games at Toronto, and he had five hits in just two games played against the Astros this past weekend.

"He's a force," Cora told MassLive.com of Devers. "He's what we envisioned. Not too many swings and misses. He's controlling the strike zone and now he's hitting the ball in the air. He made so many adjustments off the field as far as nutrition, his workout routine and his pregame routine. Credit to him, because for a 22-year-old to do all these adjustments, it takes commitment. And he has done that."

Rafael Devers' play in the field has improved as well this season. GETTY IMAGES

The road ahead

This is shaping up to be a highly important week for the Red Sox as they could get lefty David Price back in the rotation as soon as tonight at Fenway against the Cleveland Indians (7 p.m., NESN).

And on Thursday, the Sox (28-25) will shoot down to New York to battle the now-first-place Yankees (34-18). The Sox are 6.5 games back of the Yankees with Memorial Day weekend now in the rearview mirror. A strong showing in the Bronx could go a long way in making this a memorable division race.

Rafael Devers is batting .330 this season. GETTY IMAGES

Aries Make changes that will help you get ahead. Adding to your qualifications, setting up meetings or taking care of unfinished business will help you advance. Live, learn and love.

Taurus A physical change will give you the boost you need. Live a healthy lifestyle and benefit from doing what's best for you. Love and romance will enhance your life.

Gemini Keep your emotions under control. The less you let others know about you personally, the easier it will be to get things done without interference. Don't believe everything you hear.

Cancer Seize the moment and do something that brings you joy. Getting together with someone who shares your interests will bring you closer. Romance is in the stars.

Leo Don't make an unnecessary change. Stick to what works, and avoid what someone else is trying to lure you into. Trust your intelligence, experience and insight, not what others tell you.

Virgo Don't just think about what you want to do; make it happen. A physical change will lift your spirits and give you the confidence to do what makes you happy.

Libra Think matters through and make decisions based on what you discover. Refuse to let someone meddle in your affairs or make plans for you. Use your time constructively.

Scorpio Don't leave anything to chance. Size up your situation and take an innovative approach to whatever you decide to do. Someone you find interesting will spark your imagination and inspire you.

Sagittarius Look for reasonable opportunities that you can take advantage of without counting on someone else. An empty promise is likely if you rely on others.

Capricorn Keep your emotions out of important decisions. Do the work yourself and get things right the first time. A positive change at home will bring you closer to a loved one.

Aquarius Suggest changes you want to make at home or work. Be ready and willing to put in the time to complete the task you set out to do.

Pisces Don't let emotions ruin your plans. Disagreements will not solve a problem, but compromise and understanding will. Walk away from excessive situations. A change of heart is likely. EUGENIA LAST
